Frostburg State University was founded in 1898 as Maryland Normal School No. 2 and first opened in 1902. The school was renamed Frostburg State Teachers' College in 1935 and Frostburg State College in 1963. On July 7, 1987, the College became Frostburg State University.

Accredited by the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools, Frostburg serves as a regional State university for Western Maryland. The University, with an enrollment of over 4,500 students, offers comprehensive undergraduate and graduate programs of study.

In August 1988, the University opened a Center at Hagerstown offering upper-division coursework leading to the baccalaureate degree in accounting, business administration and sociology (criminal justice focus) and the master of science degree in management.

Serving the academic, economic and cultural needs of Western Maryland, the University in recent years has been a key participant in world class whitewater competitions, Cumberland Summer Theatre, and international academic conferences.

The origins of Coppin State College date back to 1900. In that year, the Baltimore City School Board initiated a one-year course for the training of black elementary school teachers at Douglass High School on Pennsylvania Avenue. In 1902, the program was expanded to a two-year Normal Department within the high school. The Department became a separate institution with its own principal in 1909. This facility for teacher training in 1926 was named the Coppin Normal School in honor of Fannie Jackson Coppin, an outstanding black pioneer in teacher education. In 1938, the School was renamed Coppin Teachers College with a four-year curriculum and authority to grant the Bachelor
