In 1922, the General Assembly established a commission to determine a location for a two-year teachers' college on the Eastern Shore. A site was selected and the institution opened as the State Normal School at Salisbury in September 1925. The School was renamed as the State Teachers College at Salisbury in 1935, and as Salisbury State College in 1963. The College became Salisbury State University in 1988 (Chapter 366, Acts of 1988).

Since its founding, the University has successfully met increasing demands for quality education and today offers four-year undergraduate programs in liberal arts, sciences, and in the professional fields of business administration, education, medical technology, nursing, respiratory therapy, and social work. In addition, the University's graduate division offers master's degree programs in business administration, education, English, history, nursing, and psychology.

Today, Salisbury State University stands as a nationally accredited four-year multipurpose liberal arts university. It offers 36 distinct undergraduate and graduate degree programs.

University College derives from the evening courses that were offered by the University from the 1920s through World War II. In 1947, the College of Special and Continuation Studies was established to administer the off-campus evening programs. Its principal officer was the dean. It was renamed University College in 1959. In 1970, the College was designated as one of five major UM campuses headed by a chancellor.

University College extends the resources of the University of Maryland System to adult, part-time students throughout the State and around the world. It offers bachelor's, master's, and noncredit professional development programs. The curriculum, class schedules, registration procedures, and comprehensive student services have all been designed to create an academic environment that supports and encourages the educational goals of busy adults.

Evening and weekend classes meet at more than 25 locations throughout Maryland, the District of Columbia, and Virginia. The European and Asian divisions conduct degree programs for U.S. military personnel and their families at more than 200 locations in twenty-two countries.
