

PROGRAM MONITORING

Program Monitoring began as separate units for residential and nonresidential monitoring. These units were combined as Residential and Nonresidential Monitoring in 1993. Later, in July of 1993, the unit was renamed Program Monitoring.

To ensure compliance with licensing regulations, Program Monitoring oversees those private firms licensed by the Department of Juvenile Services to provide residential services for troubled youth. Those providers also under contract with the Department are monitored for contract compliance. Every fiscal year, a formal licensing or program audit is conducted for each licensed facility.

In addition to the annual audit, Program Monitoring develops a plan to monitor the unique characteristics and needs of each licensed program. Program Monitoring visits each site to check physical plants; conduct investigations; follow up on corrective action for compliance; interview staff and students; and observe programs.
