

in the life of its community, an institution to which many of the best men of the state in many generations, as judges and attorneys, have devoted anxious labors, and one which by means of those labors has been successful in its purpose. From those facts there can be no detraction by changes to come. "What is now past, what the fleeting hour has once carried away, will not be rendered vain, nor altered, nor undone."