SENATORS:—The session of the Legislature, under the limit of the Constitution of ninety days, has expired.

Before separating, it becomes my pleasant duty to acknowledge the uniform courtesy and forbearance I have received from you as your presiding officer.

In accepting the position you unanimously called me to, I said then I had apprehensions on my part of not meeting your expectations in the decisions of the Chair, which would be required of it. Whether I have done so or not, there has been at no time during the session of the Senate any evidence on your part of disapproval of my course.
