Mr. Goslin made the following remarks:

Mr. Speaker:

I did not intend to speak to this question but whilst listening to the gentleman from Baltimore city I have fallen into a reminiscent frame of mind and recall a scene enacted at a reception tendered to the famous Georgian, Henry W. Grady, in Boston a short time prior to his death. He said that whilst in Washington and standing on Capitol Hill his heart beat fast as he saw the tall towering buildings of his Country's government. There were the buildings of the Treasury, of the Courts and Judges, of the President and of Congress, and as he thought of what gathered there he felt the sun in all its course could not look down on a grander sight than the domestic home of a Republic. A Republic, sir, that has taught the world its best lessons of liberty and of patriotism. Whilst contemplating the magnificence of the scene another vision flitted before him. It was a vision of a modest, quiet country home. It was just a simple, unpretentious house, set about with great big trees encircled with field and meadow, rich with the promise of harvest. The fragrance of the pink and the hollyhock in the front yard mingled with the aroma of the orchards and
