

people of the Country delay in assuming their full defense responsibilities, will mean prolongation of the conflict, and will result in further casualties among the fighting men and possibly the civilians of our Nation.

Definitely the hour is here when the people of America must range themselves upon one side or another. They must decide here and now whether they are going to be drawbacks in this battle for the preservation of freedom, or whether, with courage and determination, with all the abilities at their command, they are going to be All-American "fullbacks" and assume their part in the truly American Army that is prepared to give and give and give of their capacities, and all they possess, to the end that freedom may endure among the nations of the earth.

The hour is here when there is need, dire need, for the people to arouse themselves to a genuinely heroic mood, not for an instant, not for a month, but for months without limit, if need be, until our war objectives are attained, and the aggressors routed the world over.
