

Could anything more definitely have expressed the spirit and the determination of the American and Filipino soldiers on Bataan Peninsula? Truly did General MacArthur describe their achievement when he sadly declared that "No Army has ever done so much with so little." They did not surrender. They were simply overwhelmed—overwhelmed by force of numbers, by lack of food and supplies and medicine.

Inspired by such a spirit of resistance among our Allies and among our own soldiers, can we have here in Maryland and throughout the United States do less than respond to the utmost?
