recommendations.

Now, if we just want to submit these questions to the Commission with the idea that we have not yet made up our minds, but this is the direction that we are thinking, that is one thing, but I don't think we are supposed to ask them what to do until we have made up our minds or at least have some idea what we think should be the answer to them. Do you?

THE CHAIRMAN: I think you are really hitting at the heart of the problem. Our responsibility and really this whole question of local government has so many questions that are tied one into the other that how you differentiate and separate becomes really quite difficult. Once you have an objective, then you start going ahead and implementing that objective. I agree, that actually right at this stage we've got really two issues that we have apparently made up our minds on and that is what political subdivisions and whether home rule should be mandatory.

We haven't, however, got the detailed study to back up those issues as reflected in the very questions
