

1 mount. What is the latter?

2 MR. RODOWSKY: The court.

3 JUDGE BRUNE: May I also suggest, I know you
4 haven't gone into this very fully, that this is one point
5 which the nature of the constitutional provision leaves
6 me somewhat more puzzled than I am under the present
7 Constitution, and I am badly not puzzled there, as to 8 what are the powers of the chief judge of the State's 9 highest court as the judicial head of the judicial system?

10 MR. ENEY: You understood this is not a draft.
11 This is a mere statement of principles.

12 JUDGE BRUNE: This unfortunately goes back to 13 Rule 7, which we had supposedly passed, but because that 14 phase of the matter seemed to me to be so tightly bound
15 up with the question of rules, I reserved the question
16 to this point, perhaps erroneously.

17 MR. ENEY: I think the statement in 8 grew
18 out of the fact that others have indicated that more 19 elaborate organization is needed. That is what is going 20 to happen under 8. Isn't that about 8, Larry?

21 JUDGE BRUNE: How far can the Chief Judge of
