

1 insofar as it should be protected constitutionally as 2 against other detailed statutory material, would be 3 found in the Constitution. In other words, this would 4 mean a more elaborate educational article than that 5 being considered at the present time.

6 MR. PERKINS: What would that give you that 7 you don't have now? What is the advantage of this?

8 MRS. BOTHE: Theoretically, you could take 9 the executive department out and in simply a couple of 10 sentences, you still would have no practical change in 11 the way the State is being run.

12 MR. PERKINS: The Governor is responsible
13 for all of actions of his departments, and in education
14 today, State and Federal, if they keep it up there, we 15 would have a --

16 MR. BROOKS: What this would give us would 17 be autonomy for all the educational systems as against 18 the autonomy provision now being given solely to the 19 university. There would be a form of autonomy similar 20 to that involved in the autonomy act in the statutory 21 law for the university, relevant to all aspects of
