

1 the general problems that are going to come before them
2 to make decisions on. To expect a group of people to 3 accept in toto the work of the committee, I think, is 4 unrealistic, because there are going to be many people
5 who are going to feel that what the committee has done
6 may not need to have been done, the corrections made by 7 the committee, for the bill to be enacted.

8 It seems these people sometimes need the lobby-
9 ist to point out certain things that the committee may 10 have done that may not be to the best interests of the 11 people. Again, this comes down sometimes with a biased
12 point of view, based on maybe it would be from a business
13 point of view, insurance or labor or whatever the case may 14 be, but I think in the over-all picture, the lobbyists
15 play a very important part in the makeup of the legis-
16 lative procedure and at the same time are a guiding light 17 for many of the legislators who have been there for many,
18 many years, even though, with their experience, they find 19 they cannot keep up with the kind of trend being developed 20 today because of the education of the people on what the 21 issues are and what they desire the legislator could do
