

1                   MR. NOSSEL: It could work. The only dis-
2                   tinction you have to make is the kind of monies they 3                   collect which are under the jurisdiction of the courts;
4                   the land acquisition accounts, the litigants' funds,
5                   this sort of thing.

6                   THE CHAIRMAN: Those are special funds and 7                   special accounts.

8                   MR. GOLDSTEIN: They never come into the 9                   Treasury. They are held by the clerk. They really don't 10                  belong to the State. They belong to either known or un-11                  known people who are going to collect them upon some 12                  contingency situation arising.

13                  THE CHAIRMAN: Bernie, there are a number of 14                  agencies, are there not, that in effect, do the same 15                  thing? They collect special fees, pay the expenses of 16                  their operations, and then remit the balance to the State 17                  at the end of the year?

18                  MR. NOSSEL: This is a hodgepodge in the case of 19                  examining boards.

20                  THE CHAIRMAN: Like hairdressers, et cetera?

21                  MR. NOSSEL: If the statutory language is a
