

1 department of the university for many years wrote a
2 commentary at the end of the first unicameral session,
3 in which he reported that this session demonstrated an 4 absence of hasty legislation, a simplified and smoothly
5 working procedure; a better personnel, the liberation of 6 the legislature from the domination of the Governor as the 7 titular head of his party, and the leaders of the political 8 parties and the general publicity by means of which the 9 unilateral legislature had revived, as it were, an interest
10 of the people of the State in their law-making body. I 11 won't elaborate on that because that is a report of an 12 evaluation of the Nebraska experience.

13 After World War II, there wasn't much agitation
14 then for this change, but the model constitution continued
15 to recommend it. The American Political Science Associa-
16 tion's committee on American legislatures was published 17 with a very favorable attitude toward unicameralism, and 18 I had one little interesting personal experience in Ann
19 Arbor which I think may be worth mentioning.

20 For a number of years, I used to go to Detroit
21 to attend a program there at Wayne University and sometimes,
