

1 of where one individual judge tended to have that effect.

2 MR. MARTINEAU: Is this because he was a
3 judge or just a dominating person?

4 MR. WINTERS: No, it was just the individual.

5 MRS. BOTHE: Is there any way of really being 6 able to know that, unless you serve on one of these 7 commissions?

8 MR. WINTERS: Well, they are people, the 9 lawyers, the judges and the laymen are people. And this 10 group right here offers a variety of personalities, and 11 any other group of this number would have a different 12 variety of personalities. But I do not believe that the 13 stereotypes of judge, lawyers and laymen over a long
14 period of time, over a group of commissions are not 15 basically sound and all ought to be in there, in approxi-
16 mately the proportions that most of the commissions now
17 have. I think it is right.

18 MRS. BOTHE: Is it necessary to specify in 19 the constitutuon itself the makeup of the nominating 20 commission or would that more naturally be a question of 21 statute after the nominating commission was specified in
