having some provision for that. I do not think it is very important, really.

THE CHAIRMAN: Mr. Winters, with respect to the length of term of judges, is there any magic number that seems to be the best length of term?

MR. WINTERS: Well, there are some judges that are as short as four years. In fact, I would not be too sure that there are not some as low as two years, in some minor courts, and that is very bad, of course. On the other hand, the 21-year term in Pennsylvania, I think, is really trying to reach something equivalent to life tenure by indirection and I think that, perhaps, more judges in the U. S. have a six-year term than any other, and that is not too bad. I would be inclined to favor eight or ten years.

THE CHAIRMAN: With respect to the appellate level or trial court level or both?

MR. WINTERS: Well, either one. I do not think it makes a great deal of difference between the two. But if you couple that with non-competitive reelection and with appropriate provision for removal
