

1 MR. ENEY: Would you suggest that that con-
2 stitutional autonomy be so extensive as to grant to the 3 administration of the university or the regents the 4 power to be as selective as they might at any time
5 choose in the admission of students, or would the fact
6 there is a University of Maryland make it necessary that 7 the power be not quite that extensive?

8 DR. KUHN: Actually, the expectations of the 9 people who have been elected in recent years in the 10 legislature and the Governor and the people of Maryland 11 have placed already by custom the authority to set the 12 standards for admission of students and, while it has 13 been certainly a matter of public concern and great 14 debate, it has not been seriously questioned in recent 15 years and I believe, actually -- Dr. Bard, you could 16 speak on this from another point of view, but I believe 17 this is an area that fortunately, by the opinion of 18 enlightened people of all the citizenry has moved over 19 to control the boards and I think this has happened.

20 Now, the University of Maryland has not 21 attempted to be terribly selective. I mean, move way up
