

1 constitutional lawyer. I would not want, heaven forbid,
2 anyone thinking that I were. I am a layman who works
3 in education and I am interested in it, but if a specific 4 change in the Declaration of Rights or document is made 5 to try to clear up this question of the separation of 6 private education, particularly parochial from that of 7 public education, then I think we're in for trouble as 8 time goes on, for the simple reason the courts are trying 9 to decide this and we see an evolution over the years in 10 change here.

11 Why not keep the document simple, on some 12 basis such as you have here. Maybe you would want to 13 define the word ministry. I don't know; but I think it 14 could be made to apply to education as well as the 15 pulpit; but, in doing so, leave it so broad and general
16 that the courts could decide whether this institution
17 A got aid from the State and B did not, and so on. I 18 don't see, personally, how you can, with changing social 19 conditions and the decisions in the courts and so on 20 over the years, that you can write a document that will 21 take care of that for a considerable length of time.
