

1 the various alternatives; so that an ultimate Consti-
2 tution Commission would deal with the problem.

3 We are going to turn here to question 5. It
4 seems to me that there are other alternatives in that 5 also, that is, whether to include a provision establish-
6 ing general legislation in terms of city sizes and county
7 sizes, on the one hand, or whether to leave this problem
8 for the Legislature. That does not exhaust the possi-
9 bilities at all.

10 There could be, with respect to the second one,
11 some guidance for the Legislature. My own philosophy
12 really runs along the idea of a broad Constitution which 13 permits a very good deal of flexibility, but has in it a 14 minimum of inflexibility. So, if someone says, a new 15 development turned up in the space age, let us work that 16 out within the institutions of the State, would be my 17 philosophy, rather than saying we must amend the Con-
18 stitution because we didn't think of that. That is why 19 I think a broad Constitution would be appropriate, with-20 out getting to relative inflexibility.

21 You see, question 5 presents some inflexibility.
