<sup>1</sup> The session of April 1684 was actually a continuation of the previous session, which had been adjourned, rather than prorogued, in order to save temporary laws. For convenience it is listed here as a separate session.

<sup>2</sup> There is no evidence that he sat at either the first or third session.

<sup>3</sup> Following the ordinance he had proclaimed in 1681, Lord Baltimore issued writs to elect only two delegates per county instead of four.

<sup>4</sup> The mention of "Captain Richard Ladd" as a member of the first session was probably a clerk's error. Francis Hutchins and Richard Hall were present at all three sessions, and the county was allowed only two delegates. The clerk probably meant to write Capt. Richard Hill, a delegate from Anne Arundel County.

<sup>8</sup> Early in the third session a joint Committee of Laws (3a) was appointed to examine the temporary laws and to prepare a report; another Committee of Laws (3b) was appointed later to perfect bills and amendments.
