² Hollyday was appointed to the Council on July 15, 1735, but did not attend until February 17, 1736/37, because he had been in Europe.

³ Dulany declined to serve as speaker of the Lower House because of poor health. Harris was then chosen speaker. Dulany, however, did attend the Assembly as a delegate.

⁴ The election of Francis was declared illegal on April 3, 1735. He was, however, reelected and qualified on April 1735.
