¹ After the death of Ogle on May 3, 1752, Tasker, the president of the Upper House, assumed the duties of acting governor until the arrival of Horatio Sharpe on August 10, 1753.

² William Rasin and Abraham Falconar were discharged from the Lower House on December 11, 1751, Rasin for being an inspector within two years of his election, and Falconar for being an ordinary keeper at the time of his election. A new election was called, at which time Rasin was returned and Falconar was replaced by Richard Gresham. Falconar, however, was reelected later in the second session to replace the deceased John Gresham.

⁵ The members on all Lower House standing committees appointed in the first session were reappointed to continue in the second through sixth sessions, but their names were not relisted. It is presumed that Edward Gantt, who was added to the Committee of Arms and Ammunition in the middle of the third session, was not included in the reappointment of members made during the fourth session. The Upper House member on the Committee of Bills of Credit-Paper Currency was not named in the first, fourth, and sixth sessions.
