<sup>1</sup> The validity of Steuart's election as a delegate from Annapolis was again questioned through petition from Henry Woodward, who sought to disqualify some of the votes cast for his opponent. After some discussion, both parties agreed to avoid "giving the House any further Trouble in this Controversy," and requested that the election "so far as it concerns them should be declared Void." The Lower House called for a new election, at which time Steuart was again returned. He requalified on April 4, 1759.

<sup>2</sup> The members on all Lower House standing committees appointed during the first convention were reappointed to continue in the first session and second convention, but the only names relisted were the members on the Committee of Bills of Credit-Paper Currency. All committees were individually relisted in the second and third sessions. During the third convention the Lower House members of all third session standing committees were reappointed to continue, but again the only names relisted were the members on the Committee of Bills of Credit-Paper Currency. An Upper House member of this committee was named each session.
