¹ On October 28, 1773, unexpectedly and without notice to the governor or Upper House, the Lower House adjourned itself to "consult their Constituents on the present distressed Circumstances of the Province." The following day, the governor, acting with the advice of the Council, prorogued the Assembly until November 16, 1773.

² Hall, originally a delegate from Baltimore County, was elected to represent the newly formed Harford County by the third session.

³ White, originally a delegate from Dorchester County, was elected to represent the newly formed Caroline County by the third session.

⁵ Harford and Caroline counties were formed by acts of the Assembly passed during the second session.

⁶ No members were appointed to the Committee of Arms and Ammunition in either the first session or the convention. The members on all Lower House committees appointed in the second session were reappointed to continue in the third, but the only names relisted were the members on the committees of Laws to Expire and Claims-Bills of Credit.
