MR. CASE: We call that an obligation.

MR. SYKES: Mr. Chairman, I think the point can be met, consistent with the Committee's desire, by saying, unless the act of the General Assembly authorizing the creation of an obligation includes such an irrevocable pledge, the organization so authorized shall not be considered an indebtedness of the State. I think that would clear it up and avoid clumsiness. How does that strike Mr. Case? If you make a distinction between an obligation and a debt.

MR. CASE: To me, it is not clumsy. To me, it is perfectly clear. What you are doing is just moving words around.

MR. SYKES: There is a distinction between an obligation and indebtedness, and the only way you can create an indebtedness is by the magic word, and you authorize an obligation, not purport to authorize it, and that obligation doesn't contain the magic words, then it is not an indebtedness.

MR. CASE: But you may purport to authorize an indebtedness, but unless you use the magic words, you
