

1 revenues. There may be in the future and probably
2 will be in the future many instances in which the State
3 may want to support bonds which are being paid for by 4 revenues from specific projects -- college dormitories,
5 we may want to take over the State function, public hous-
6 ing, port authority. We may in the future want to develop 7 a school authority construction such as they have in 8 the University of Pennsylvania. I don't think we should 9 in this Constitution estop the General Assembly from 10 such financing if this seems to be appropriate.

11 Let me take as an example, not Hopkins. I
12 think this sort of brings in a private institution.
13 Let's take the new campus at the University of Maryland,
14 Catonsville, which is opening today. The classroom
15 buildings there are built by bond issue, general obliga-
16 tion bond issues, and there is no question about that.
17 Let us suppose the University wants to put dormitories
18 there. Under present conditions, it could probably get 19 the money from the Federal agency, but this may change
20 in the future. Under this twenty-five year limitation,
21 then, the credit of the State could be to provide only
