

1 might decide to submit to the electorate in parts.
2 For instance, there may be some article or one section
3 controversial and the Convention should perhaps decide 4 that that should be submitted separately to a vote for 5 approval or rejection. His question is are you fore-
6 closing this possibility in the language you use?

7 MR. SCANLAN: Very frankly, I think under 8 the language used, if the Convention wanted to proceed
9 along the lines to which you referred, it could do it 10 simply by proposing a series of amendments that it would 11 have a title A to amend the present Constitution,
12 following articles of the present Constitution. Then 13 it could have a second proposed amendment to amend the 14 following several articles of the proposed Constitution.

15 THE CHAIRMAN: I will give a simple
16 illustration. Suppose the Convention adopted a new 17 Constitution but had considerable debate over whether 18 it should contain a prohibition against lotteries and 19 decided the new Constitution should be submitted with 20 the exception of the prohibition against lotteries and 21 the prohibition against lottery submitted as a separate
