1 2

3 4

5

6

8

9

11

13

14

15 16

17

18 19

20

21

so that we would, if we felt it wise, not inadvertantly adopt a provision in the Constitution which would in any way impede any kind of reorganization that might go through desirable. Is that about right?

JUDGE ADKINS: That is exactly right. We have had only one meeting with their executive secretary and as the Chairman suggests, they are in a very formative stage, but generally speaking their job, taking the language that Dr. Bard referred to, for example, their job would be to prescribe, if for example, we were to adopt a model constitution language, their job would then be to prescribe what the 20 departments would be and how the various functions of the State would be grouped within those departments. That is not, however, in our thinking, a matter for the Constitution. All we are trying to do is to get sufficiently broad enabling language to permit a commission like the Curlette Commission or succeeding commissions to reorganize; as the needs of the State indicate.

DR. TEMPLETON: I assume we would not be too