

1 and each of the proponents of that idea have said you
2 will draw from the counties and you will draw from the 3 General Assembly, so you are going to be drawing away
4 powers that you are giving to the local subdivisions
5 and giving to the General Assembly. You are creating 6 a separate intermediate form of government.

7 Now notwithstanding the fact that there is 8 a pocket where some such solution might be advisable 9 or might be a good one, nevertheless insofar as the 10 state as a whole is concerned, that is not true. You 11 don't have the necessity for an intermediate form of 12 government with all the ramifications that go with it.
13 I don't mean to do other than to point out certain 14 problems.

15 We have just gone through a primary election
16 where the voting machine wasn't capable of carrying all 17 the names that you go in and vote for. If you create 18 an intermediate government, you are introducing into the 19 picture a greater degree of confusion.

20 You are introducing into the picture the 21 necessity and the responsibility upon the electorate of
