THE CHAIRMAN: Well, I think this is a real departure from the existing Constitution. If we had the same setup as under the existing Constitution, where you had the necessity for either an act of the General Assembly or a general Express Powers Act, I would not be too much concerned by the point that Mr. Case mentions, but I think that the fact that we now say all counties, which would mean a county which has not adopted a charter form of government would have the power, and there is no limitation in the Constitution as to its borrowing power, then, unless the Legislature adopts a general act limiting the power of all counties in the area of borrowing money, the county would have unlimited power and this, I think, is a little different from what we have at the present time and it gives me, at least, some concern.

MRS. FREEDLANDER: Would you answer my second question, please, with regard to the extraordinary vote?

Our right to tell --

THE CHAIRMAN: I personally feel that the extraordinary vote ought to be whatever is provided in the
