

two, sometimes have pieces going to referendum I don't think this is a bad percentage but it is healthy. I think it would be a tremendous injustice to the people to deny them the right to either criticize or support the Legislators who made these type laws. I think we should make sure that the referendum stays in the Constitution. I also feel that the percentage factor should be what it is at the present time at three per cent; with the increase in population and increase in voting people, it means that this percentage is going to increase in numbers as time goes on also, so that three per cent where it seems low, as the voting population increases in Maryland, it means that many substantial numbers will be needed on petitions to get the bill before referendum.

DR. BURDETTE: I should like to support the principle of referendum and for a reason that has not been touched on, precisely, although Mr. Scanlan spoke to the contrary just slightly. I feel often when I go to the polls to vote, having lived in the state a long time, and friends of mine are running for office,
