

1 areas, such as, well, most any other thing you can 2 conceive and it seems to me that the situation is 3 precisely the same as where constitutionality is 4 involved. You always have the possibility that an act
5 is going to be declared unconstitutional. When the 6 administration passes the act, it can start a court case 7 and find out perhaps but then maybe it doesn't, so my 8 point is that you always have in new legislation a 9 possibility that the apple cart may be upset, and the 10 difference is that where you have got a referendum
11 petition, at least the people who are charged with 12 putting it into effect know that it exists and if they 13 think it is real, they might not. They might themselves
14 suspend the action or operation of the law, so I think 15 it really is^a/theoretical thing, that as a practical
16 matter would not have much weight.

17 MR. GENTRY: I think the question that is 18 before us, in the form in which it is now proposed, we 19 have the emergency law provision and there if the 20 Legislature deems that this should be an act, and there 21 is a three-fifths or whatever the required vote is to
