

The bulk of Jackson's estate<sup>136</sup> was left to his nephew, Joseph Jackson, son of Joseph and Peggy Jackson who came from Westmoreland County, England, some time during the summer of 1802, and settled in Wythe County, Virginia. During his latter years, Jackson must have kept a store in Annapolis. His inventory did not make clear exactly what type of store it was, but he probably sold a general assortment of merchandise, especially hardware and groceries.<sup>137</sup>

Jackson was one of the less conspicuous Baltimore printers of the 1790's, but together with John Smith, he holds the distinction of having printed the second Sunday newspaper in the United States - the first Sunday newspaper in this country which met with any degree of success.

136 Anne Arundel county, Md. Wills. Liber TTS, no. 1, folio 451.

137 Anne Arundel county, Md. Inventories. Liber SB, no. 2, folio 454.