

more in 1802.⁴¹ His son, George Keatinge, published a political paper, the Jacksonian, in Baltimore, in 1827.⁴² His daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Quincy, lived in Baltimore for a number of years.⁴³

Hanna and Green. - Andrew Hanna and Henry Green (or Greene) announced to the citizens of Baltimore on April 13, 1798, that they had opened their

Book-printing office. Books, hand-bills, blanks, promissory notes, circular letters, bank checks, cards, &c. printed neat, with great dispatch, and on the most reasonable terms, at the office of A. Hanna & H. Greene, No. 27, Market-street, next door to Messrs. Yates & Campbell's Vendue-store.⁴⁴

In spite of the new firm's location at a site which seems ideal for the prosecution of a business, nothing more is heard of Hanna and Green's activities until the end of the following month, when they advertised the first number of their new magazine, the General Magazine and Impartial Review,⁴⁵ which they proposed to continue monthly if five hundred subscribers were obtained; it would be printed on medium size octavo paper with a new type cast in the foundry of Binney and Robinson of Philadelphia, and would cost a quarter of a dollar, each number. The publishers, "being young beginners", submitted the work 41 Federal gazette. March 13, 1802.

42 Baltimore gazette. March 17, 1827.

43 Schultz, E.T. op.cit. v. 2, p. 309.

44 Telegraphe. April 13, 1798.

45 Appendix A. Imprint bibliography, item 433.