

as "near the Court House".

The significance of the form, if it should be proved to be a Maryland form, is that it is the only extant issue of the Story press during its second Baltimore period. If it is proved not to be a Maryland form, it may be that Story printed it in Baltimore for clients in some other state and city - what city, there seems to be no way of ascertaining. It seems probable, however, in view of the directory listing and the imprint that it is a Baltimore publication.

Story disappears from the Baltimore Directory after 1799. The inference may be drawn that his printing venture was unsuccessful, and that he ceased to maintain an independent establishment. He died in Baltimore on July 2, 1807, at Mr. James Armitage's.¹⁰² His effects were valued at $155.10.¹⁰³

Jones Bull. - Jones Bull is an enigmatic Baltimore publisher who appeared briefly in 1800, issued one book, and vanished. This advertisement appeared in the Telegraphe and Baltimore Daily Advertiser of May 15, 1800:

The Pleasures of Hope, and other Poems, by Thomas Campbell, are just published by Jones Bull, No. 228 Market-street, and may be had ¹⁰² Federal gazette, July 8, 1807.

¹⁰³ Baltimore county, Maryland. Inventories. Liber W.B., no. 25, folio 243.