Little is known of Phebe Grieves' later life. Mary Grieves, probably the daughter of Thomas and Phebe, married John M. Buchanan, editor of the Cumberland Advocate, on May 10, 1825.⁵³ Phebe Grieves died at the age of fifty-seven, October 9, 1822, and is buried beside Stewart Herbert in St. John's Episcopal cemetery, Hagerstown.

Thomas Grieves and the Second English Press of Hagerstown. - On March 9, 1797, the first issue of the Maryland Herald and Elizabethtown Advertiser was presented to the citizens of Washington county by Thomas Grieves. In his address "To the Public" the new editor promised to publish the paper once a week, "with a neat type, on good paper... on Thursday at an early hour." His subscription price would be two dollars, half of which was payable in advance or three months from the commencement of the paper, and the balance semi-annually in advance. Concerning the content, the editor stated that

Besides the usual selection of intelligence, foreign and domestic, which constitutes the principle contents of the generality of newspapers, the editor of the Maryland Herald will sedulously seek out whatever may tend to improve or extend the interests of commerce, agriculture, manufac-
