

- (1) The advertisement for the above title proves conclusively that a publication, A Divine call, appeared in 1794.
- (2) Although Frederick and Samuel Green consistently advertised their publications in their Maryland gazette of Annapolis, no advertisement for A Divine call was inserted during 1790.
- (3) Evans does not list A Divine call under 1790.
- (4) Although there is a difference in title between Wheeler 547 and Evans 26897, Evans obviously obtained his title from the advertisement in the Maryland gazette, and the advertisement may easily be a description of the contents rather than an exact quotation of the title.
- (5) The New York Public library's card for their copy of Wheeler 547, in the Union catalog at the Library of Congress carries the questioned date "[1795?"; the New York Public library later changed their date to 1790 to be consistent with the Huntington library (letter dated April 26, 1942).
- (6) There is no internal evidence to support either date.
- (7) It seems somewhat strange that three copies of the unadvertised Wheeler 547 are extant; but no copies of the later Evans 26897, which was certainly published, can be located.

However, in a letter dated May 11, 1942, the Huntington library states that the date 1790 was pencilled on their copy by Wilberforce Eames, and his bibliographical information was highly accurate. Therefore, since such bibliographers as Eames, Rosenbach, Waters and Wheeler (who all obtained their information from Huntington, as did the other libraries, MdHi and NN, which possess the book) have affixed the date 1790 to those copies which have been located, it may be that Evans 26897 is another edition, or perhaps another publication.

Evans 26897; Rosenbach (American Jewish bibliography) 91.

No copy located.

Edwards's Baltimore daily advertiser. / [rule] /
 A political, and commercial paper, open to all parties, but influenced by none. / [rule] / Vol.
 II. No. 452. Wednesday, January 1, 1794 [-Vol.
 III. No. 764? Wednesday, December 31? 1794 ]
 Baltimore: Printed by Philip Edwards, in Market-street, between South and Gay-streets. // [1794]