

remarkably fine personal appearance, standing six feet, four inches in height, and of the most genial and winning manners.⁵⁴

Dobbin was in Baltimore in January, 1795, as Clayland's partner, as proved by the proposal to print the Baltimore Telegrapho.

In the meantime, the Baltimore office of Samuel and John Adams had issued at least four publications during 1794 and 1795, very likely under Clayland's direction, Bannaker's New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia Almanac ... for ... 1795,⁵⁵ Regulations for the Order and Discipline of the Volunteer Army of the United States of America printed for George Keatinge's book store;⁵⁶ William Duke's Observations on the Present State of Religion in Maryland;⁵⁷ and Reverend James Muir's An Examination of the Principles Contained in the Age of Reason.⁵⁸

Clayland probably severed his connection with the Adams firm early in 1795, for no Baltimore imprints from the Adams press are known after that date. The novel, Mrs. Susanna Rowson's The Fille de Chambre⁵⁹ was issued by Clayland in 1795, probably before his partnership with Dobbin.

54 Schultz, E.T. op. cit. v. 2, p. 328.

55 Appendix A. Imprint bibliography, item 150.

56 Appendix A. Imprint bibliography, item 208.

57 Appendix A. Imprint bibliography, item 228.

58 Appendix A. Imprint bibliography, item 249.

59 Appendix A. Imprint bibliography, item 259.