St. John's College, Annapolis. Visitors and Governors.

To the Citizens of Maryland. The Visitors and [Governors] of St. John's College feel themselves deeply concerned at the repeated attempts to destroy this [noble?] institution. It is certainly to be lamented by all friends to the liberal instruction of youth, and the consequent welfare of the state, that the various slanders, disseminated with a view to its destruction, have diminished the reputation, which for several years it had enjoyed. Its trustees, then earnestly intreat ... [Annapolis, 1805]
