

the year there were several large orders of film provided for Winterthur Museum, Colonial Williamsburg, and the Catholic University among others.

The bulk of our filming was of church records and of county land and probate records. In the case of church records the film or the original was kept at the Hall of Records—the church had first choice.

Microfilm which becomes a part of our collection, either archival or library, will be found listed in other sections of this Report, but here I should like to mention the few large projects which are of sufficient interest to be repeated. Each day during the session of the General Assembly we filmed the proceedings immediately after adjournment and before the copy was sent to the printer; a large number of public documents in our collection were filmed for the use of the Library of Congress; film was provided for the 1851-1873 land records of Dorchester County which were transferred earlier to the Hall of Records; and we microfilmed the land records of Anne Arundel County from 1880 to 1903 (part of a project to film these records from 1851 to 1949). The Anne Arundel County project alone required the filming of over 35,000 pages.
