A SOCIAL REVIEW

Mr. Geo. Leo Ferguson gave a Ye Old English Dish of Tee, ec., Friday, September 14, 1928, in honor of Miss Edith Ann Moore, at his home, 1428 Druid Hill Avenue. Over fifty young friends of Miss Moore indulged in the cards, dancing, repast and other regal features of a smartly arranged send-off party amidst the prettily decorated settings. Miss Moore departed a few days later to commence her career as a teacher and some of the most delightful fun of the party was had during the period spent in giving Miss Moore a little example of teaching in a country school. Jokes were read by each of the guests in the roles of scholars having their reading lessons, until ceased from the sheer volleys of their laughter. Then music lessons were tried until the shrieks and howls sent the whole party into hectic convulsions. Favors were distributed as the revelry continued and before the guests finished their delectable repast a grand Ye Old English Shower was staged until somebody raised a big white handkerchief as a flag of truce.

A variety of cake and also cheese dainties, salted nuts, tiny mints and punch composed the menu, the punch being served in dishes, in accordance with the invitation. The guests were seated around a table in the form of a large E.

Lawson Vessels played the piano so superbly that after dancing up to 1.00 A. M., the guests still hated for him to stop. Mr. and Mrs. Moore, the parents of Miss Edith Moore, Mrs. Oscar Johnson and her granddaughter, Cridilla, Irvin Morris, Clarence Thornton and William Fax helped Mr. Ferguson to throw his unique and original party.

Among those invited were: Mr. and Mrs. L. S. Moore and Mr. and Mrs. John Lightfoot; Mrs. Oscar Johnson, Mrs. Ella Lynch and Mrs. Annie Johnson; The Misses Edith Moore, Louise Moore, Fannie Hayes, Phoebe Jackson, Gertrude Saunders, Marian Kinney, Alice Kinney, Cridilla Johnson, Pearl Diggs, Katherine Dent, Dorothy Bobbit, Elsie Nophlin, Naomi Stewart, Edith Thomas, Lillian Jones, Ethel Brown, Leona Butler and Gladys Johnson; The Messrs.
