

firm becoming known as Riall Jackson and Company soon stamped itself as one of the leading insurance agency groups, not only of Baltimore, but of the South. This partnership continued until 1929, when Mr. Jackson bought out the interests of Mr. Riall.

In 1923, announcement that Howard W. Jackson was a candidate for the high office as Mayor, was heralded with delight by thousands of friends, and in a three-cornered fight, he won by the largest majority that had ever been given to a Mayor of Baltimore up to that time.

Retiring from public office in 1927, Mr. Jackson devoted the next four years to his insurance business, and again in the election of 1931 he was deluged with requests to again become a candidate for Mayor, and accepted after a petition of more than sixty thousand voters had been placed before him. His success in the general election is still remembered as he was swept into office over his Republican opponent, William G. Albrecht, by a majority of over sixty-three thousand, the largest majority ever given to a mayoralty candidate in the City of Baltimore.

In May of 1935 Mayor Jackson was elected by another large majority for his third term of office. His victory in the primary election and later in the general election was generally accepted as a tribute to his splendid business ability which carried the city through several years of depression in a healthy financial condition, while the severe problem of aiding the unemployed was met by adequate municipal participation in the various phases of the situation. The fact that Mayor Jackson had placed the city on a balanced budget system, free from floating debt and at the same time maintaining all the vital operations of government without impairment undoubtedly contributed largely to his success at the polls in connection with his campaign for re-election.

Baltimore has been widely advertised throughout the nation as a city with money in bank, and Mayor Jackson has generally been given credit for this condition.

DANIEL ELLISON

Mr. Daniel Ellison, who for the fourth time has served as City Councilman from the Fourth District, is now a candidate for Congress.

His rich and rare experience as the only Republican Councilman has particularly fitted him to represent the colored voters as Congressman, for he has had the experience of representing minority groups both in race and politics.

He is keen, alert, capable, sincere and honest in his convictions.

Is a loyal friend and ever ready to serve his constituents.

He is running on a very generous platform that should appeal to every forward thinking citizen, especially the colored voter.

He has pledged himself to "Social Security"—pensions for the aged and unemployed and aid to the handicapped.

Equal rights for all, regardless of race, creed or color.

To support the Howard University appropriations.

DANIEL ELLISON

To support the N. A. A. C. P. in their anti-lynch bill.

He believes in higher education for all regardless of race and will work to that end.

Basing his future conduct on past performance as City Councilman he is asking you to give him a chance to represent you in Congress where he can do bigger and better things, not only for Maryland, but can help in the big problems that confront minority groups everywhere.
