

sentment or ill-will toward any of the men with whom I have ever served. Always, as I look back over the sessions that are past, and call up the memories of those who have served with me, whether on my side or on another, the feeling that animates me is one of good-will and satisfaction.

And so we leave today, never to meet again as a general assembly. We of the present assembly have struck some new notes in the Legislative history of our State. Among them at least two stand out: the first in that we have taken the time and trouble to travel the length and the breadth of the State to see for ourselves the condition of the people; and the second, in that we have assembled today to carry to its ultimate limit the principle of political equality to which all of us are in theory attached.

I hope you won't forget me. I know I shall not forget you. I only hope that in the long years to come when we look back upon these meetings we shall look back upon them with a sense of gratitude for the personal friendships we have made and with a deep feeling of satisfaction in the public service we have accomplished.

So, I bid you farewell, until we meet again.

By Mr. Lindsay:

ANNAPOLIS, MD., July 29, 1930.
