No. 44.

Whereas, There are several cases of debts due to the state, in which judgments have been obtained, and accounts settled, and although the debts are perfectly secure, yet a forced sale of property at this time of general pressure, would prove ruinous to many individuals; Therefore,

P. eamble.

Resolved, That in all cases of debts due to the state, previous to the year of eighteen hundred and twenty two, wherein judgments have been obtained, or accounts have been settled, and where in the opinion of the state agents, that the debts are perfectly secure, and that the state can run no possible risk in granting a further indulgence, the state agents are hereby authorised and empowered, to extend indulgence, and suspend further proceedings against the
