

selection or drawing, but such error when discovered may be corrected by drawing from the appropriate box another person in place of the person so improperly selected or drawn, and if the foreman so selected after having been sworn should die, or for any cause be excused by the court, the judge or judges after drawing another name to be placed upon the panel of grand jurors, as provided in this section, may select and appoint any one of the twenty-three persons constituting the grand jury as foreman in place of the foreman so dead or excused. It is understood upon passage of this Act that although there are to be three terms of court with new petit jury panels picked for each term, that grand juries are only to be chosen twice yearly, i.e. at the beginning of the April and October terms, and that there are to be four jury panels for each term instead of two. After the October drawing of the one hundred and twenty-two jurors from the panel of three hundred names, one hundred additional names are to be selected in the same proportion as the three hundred names were selected from the various councilmanic districts and placed in the box. Under this new system, the four panels of twenty-five persons each selected for the January term will be drawn from the remainder same three hundred names selected in October, plus the one hundred additional names that were placed in the box after the October drawing. The April term then will start over again with three hundred new names selected from the various councilmanic districts to be placed in the respective drawers in the proportion herein provided for, another one hundred and twenty-two names drawn, a new grand jury selected, and four new panels of petit jurors.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That this Act shall take effect June 1, 1965.

Approved April 8, 1965.
