

REVISOR'S NOTE: This subsection presently appears as Article 96A, section 96(c) of the Code. Although the term commissioner is the correct statutory title for the chief executive of the District of Columbia government, this term might be confused with the three-commissioner form of government which preceded the present form. The chief executive customarily is called mayor. Furthermore, the form of government may change in the future. For these reasons, only the phrase, Government of the District of Columbia, is used. The only other changes made are in style.
