

commissioners. An appeal shall be docketed in the circuit court against the party or petitioner in whose favor the decision of the county commissioners was made. If the appeal is taken by a taxpayer not a party to the proceedings, and the appeal is not sustained, the appealing taxpayer shall pay the costs, unless the court shall otherwise direct.

(b) In an appeal pursuant to subsection (a), either party has the right to a jury trial. The circuit court shall ratify, reject, alter, or amend the proceedings before the county commissioners and in the court so as to bring the events of the case fairly to trial. The circuit court may enter the judgment in the case that the county commissioners ought to have entered, including costs. The judgment is final and may be enforced by due process of law.]

SECTION 2. AND BE IT FURTHER ENACTED, That this Act shall take effect July 1, 1975.

Approved April 22, 1975.
