

are revised to refer expressly to those repair order certifications.

Throughout this section, present express references to violations being "a misdemeanor" are deleted as unnecessary in light of §27-101 of this article to the same effect.

In subsection (a) of this section, the present reference to an employee of a "registered dealer" is deleted as misleading since only dealers who also are inspection stations may issue certificates in the first instance, and those dealers are included in the reference to an "inspection station"; see, §23-101(d) and (f) of this title. The subsection also is revised to prohibit wrongful issuances by an "inspection station" itself; this is done to cover the case of a sole proprietorship, for example, where the individual issuing the document might be the owner and, therefore, not technically an "employee".

Subsection (b)(1) of this section is new language added to conform the present inconsistent references to "imitation, counterfeit, or altered" certificates on the one hand and "fictitious" certificates on the other.

Subsection (d) of this section is revised to conform to §23-103(c) of this title, which requires surrender of the specified items only if required by the Division.

The only other changes are in style.
