

(1) Exempt from licensing -- no registration with the Department required (examples: domestic television receiver and luminous watches -- SSR §§ B.2(c) and C.4(c)(1)(i));

(2) Exempt from licensing -- registration with the Department required (example: nonmedical X-ray machines -- SSR, parts B and F);

(3) General license issued by Department -- no registration with Department required (example: Polonium static elimination device -- SSR § C.22(a)(1));

(4) General license issued by Department -- registration with Department required (example: physicians using certain radiation sources in laboratory analysis -- SSR §§ C.22(h)(1) and (2)); and

(5) Specific license required -- application to and approval by Department required (example: physician using certain radiation sources on patients for diagnosis or treatment -- SSR §§ C.25 and C.26(b)).

The SSR also includes definitions of "general license" and "specific license" similar to those in § 8-101 of this title. See SSR § C.20.

This title is derived from 2 subtitles in former Article 43. The subtitle captioned "Radiation Control" appeared as former §§ 675 through 689A, while the subtitle entitled "Low-Level Nuclear Waste Disposal" appeared as former §§ 689E through 689G. The organization of this title reflects the apparent intent of the General Assembly that these former subtitles be a single statutory unit. This intent is evident from the fact that the former subtitle "Low-Level Nuclear Waste Disposal" contained extensive provisions, which now appear as Subtitle 4 of this title, that limit the authority of the Department to issue licenses controlling sources of radiation, yet nowhere in that former subtitle is the Department given any authority to issue those licenses in the first place. The obvious intent of the language "the Department may not issue a license under this subtitle" (emphasis added) in former Article 43, § 689F(a)(1) was to refer to the license authorized by former Article 43, § 689A(a), which now appears in § 8-301 of this title. Evidence of this intent may be found in the language "licensed under § 689A of this article" (emphasis added) in former Article 43, § 689F(b)(3).
