CHAPTER 218

(Senate Bill 193)

AN ACT concerning

Vehicle Laws - Traffic Control Signal Monitoring Systems - Yellow Signals and Minimum Speed Thresholds

FOR the purpose of requiring certain agencies primarily responsible for traffic control at certain intersections with traffic control signal monitoring systems to ensure that the length of the yellow light change interval, which warns that the traffic control signal light will turn red, is set ~~for certain minimum times for certain posted approach speeds~~ in accordance with regulations adopted by the State Highway Administration consistent with certain standards or guidelines established by the Federal Highway Administration; establishing a certain minimum speed threshold below which recorded images of motor vehicles entering an intersection against a red signal indication will not be produced; requiring the State Highway Administration to adopt certain regulations by a certain date; and generally relating to the establishment of ~~minimum~~ certain time intervals for the display of yellow signals ~~and minimum speed thresholds for the production of recorded images of motor vehicles entering intersections against a red signal~~ at an intersection monitored by a traffic control monitoring system.
